

Rather than weakening broadcast ownership rules, they should be tightened. There is already too great a concentration of power in the hands of too few corporations and we should not stray from the path of free competition that Theodore Roosevelt wisely championed. The founding fathers made the right to a free press the first amendment to the constitution, recognizing the role it played in establishing our liberty. The media should no more be subject to oligopolistic control than to the control of the State; either threatens our freedom.
